Pretty Hattie Weygant Wanted to be an Actress.

THE VICTIM OF A CITY'S WILES.

She Lies Dead in an Undertaker's Shop Killed by an Amateur Doctor.

A Young Woman Under Arrest for Causing Her Death, and the Police Are Looking for Two Young Men Who Were Implicated by the Dead Girl—She Had Taken a Medicine that Venally Causes Death.

New York, March 15.—Hattie E. Weygant, lived until six months ago at home with her father, a fairly prosperous shoemaker at Newburgh. She had a stepmother with whom she could not agree, and at times would desert her household duties to earn pin money in a local factory.

In September last she suddenly and mysteriously disappeared from her home. Brothers and sisters, and half-brothers and half-sisters searched for her, but in vain.

Hattie had become stage-struck. She came to this city, and her pretty face, rounded form and good voice secured for her a position as a chorus girl, and she adopted "May Knowles" as her stage name. She took a furnished parlor in Mrs. Peterson's "Ninth Street Hotel," 56 East Ninth street, and not long ago was in the chorus of "La Cigale," of which Lillian Russell was the star.

On March 1 Dr. S. B. Minden, of 8 St. Marks place, was aroused at 11 o'clock at night to attend the chorus girl. He found her suffering from septic peritonitis, or blood poisoning, consumption of the apex of the left lung and kidney disease. She was a victim of the girl that had left Newburgh in September to win histrionic honors in the metropolis. Dr. Minden visited the girl twice daily, and last saw her alive at midnight last Saturday.

She had steadily refused to tell who was the cause of her trouble until two days before, when in the presence of a Mr. and Mrs. Rhodes of this city, she implicated A. F. Gillingham, a medical student at the Flower Homoeopathic Hospital, and the son of wealthy parents residing in this city. She also implicated Florence Crocker, a dashing blond who lived in the same house with her, and she has been arrested.

At 10 o'clock on Sunday morning Florence Crocker called at Dr. Minden's office and told him Hattie was dead. She had died three hours before.

The Crocker girl told the coroner that a week prior to March 1 Hattie visited her room and told her of her ailment.

She administered on several occasions remedies of a kind she had used herself when she was "Edgie," but they were of no avail. Then she administered a cocoa butter tablet, a box of which she had in her trunk. It is a potent medicine that Dr. Minden says usually causes death, except the woman is exceptionally robust. Soon after the tablet had been administered the dead girl was taken with terrible pain in her stomach, and it was then Dr. Minden was called in.

A Miss Crocker knew that deceased had a friend who was a medical student. She also had a friend who she called "Edgie" and she recalls "Edgie" as a young man. He looked like a sporting man. He will also be arrested if he can be found.

TROUBLE IN SING SING.

Convicts Rebel Against Work—An Outbreak Contemplated. SING SING, N. Y., March 15.—It was learned yesterday that there was a little trouble at the prison Saturday, when about twenty convicts refused to go to work. They were all employed in the stone yard and were under a contractor.

The prison officials received information that this was only a preliminary move on the part of the convicts, who had planned to make a big fuss and then escape in the excitement. It was said that the convicts had secured citizens clothes and had everything in readiness to make a general outbreak some time this week.

The keepers had some difficulty in compelling the convicts to return to work, but a few threats soon brought them to their senses. A strict search was made through the different shops, but only one suit of citizens clothes could be found.

The Parkhurst Charges.

NEW YORK, March 15.—District Attorney Nicol in answer to the Rev. Dr. Parkhurst's charges replies as follows: "I would respectfully suggest that Dr. Parkhurst go to the Police Courts and swear out warrants as do the officers of the societies like that to which he is attached, when complaints against disorderly houses are made. It is the proper place. Mr. Gerry and Mr. Comstock go there and they have no fault to find with the way this office is conducted. I shall go before the Grand Jury and discuss this matter with them. I know that the police are making arrests all the time in the case of excise violations, and there are not enough of courts to try them in."

HELD FOR MURDER

Lieut. Hetherington to Stand Trial in Yokohama.

ROBINSON'S DYING STATEMENT.

It Was Addressed to Admiral Belknap, and He Freely Forgave Hetherington.

He Begged That This Letter be Used to Secure Leniency for Him at His Trial—The Jury Will be Composed of Four Americans Selected from Thirty-four Residents of Yokohama—The California Supreme Court Has Final Jurisdiction.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 15.—The Oceanic arrived yesterday afternoon from China and Yokohama. Lieut. Hetherington has been held by the coroner's jury for killing the Englishman, Gower Robinson, on the charge of wilful murder.

Admiral Belknap was seen yesterday afternoon and asked in regard to the report that Gower Robinson left an ante-mortem letter addressed to him. The Admiral said:

"Robinson, a few hours before he died, dictated a letter to Dr. Ellbridge addressed to me, in which he said he freely forgave Hetherington for what he had done, and begged that the letter would be used to secure leniency for him at his trial. This letter I forwarded to the Secretary of the Navy, and he must have it by this time."

"The feeling in Yokohama was bitter at first, but when all the facts came out people began to take a right view of it. Robinson broke his word as a man of honor not to continue his attentions to Mrs. Hetherington. He made a distinct promise to the Lieutenant in a letter, which he holds, and he also promised several of Hetherington's friends. He was repeatedly warned that he was playing a dangerous game and that he might expect death at any moment should Hetherington discover proof of criminal intimacy. But he was a reckless adventurer who had ruined a number of married women and always found the husbands very lenient. Robinson's character was so notorious that none of his friends would swear to the complaint against Hetherington and, as a last resort, the marshal of our consulate had to make the legal complaint."

Hetherington will be tried before four jurymen selected from thirty-four American residents of Yokohama. Consul-General Robinson will preside, and the California Supreme Court has final jurisdiction in case of appeal. The trial will not occur till documents can be obtained from the United States with a history of similar cases as precedents.
